

credit for work done at BMC: Rutgers, Harvard Undergraduate School, University of California Undergraduate School, University of Wisconsin, University of Texas.

Transfer at full value was effected at Bard, Harvard Graduate School, University of Pennsylvania Graduate School, Oberlin, Columbia and Columbia Graduate School, Yale Graduate School, University of North Carolina, University of Cincinnati, University of Hawaii, Reed College, Rhode Island School of Design, Farmington State Teachers College, Antioch, Syracuse.

Transfer "on condition" (the conditions vary) was reported for Juilliard, Northwestern, University of Illinois Medical School, University of California Graduate School, Washington University, George Williams College, Yale Graduate School.

Transfer of "selected" credits was offered by Los Angeles City College, New School for Social Research, Milwaukee State Teachers, Syracuse, Radcliffe, Washington University, Wayne, University of California at Los Angeles.

Revaluation of credit with some loss to the student was enforced by Whittier, Temple, Wayne.

It is uncertain whether these actions represent in every case the general policy of the institution in relation to Black Mountain College credits, or whether the policy varies with the individual circumstances. The latter seems to be sometimes true since two students have had different degrees of success in transferring to the same college.

Graduates of Black Mountain College have reportedly little or no trouble in gaining admission to candidacy for advanced work. Undergraduates apparently face greater risks if planning to transfer.

Where they are and what they're doing

Nancy Albee, Accord, N. Y., graduated B.A. from Bard College in December.

Harold Altman, 1533 Jesup Ave., New York City, painter, has a studio on Washington Square.

Kenneth R. Ayres, 2600 Maple Ave., Dallas, Texas, is working as an aircraft